FCA

False Claims Act

INTRODUCTION

The district court dismissed this qui tam action because it concluded that defendants' alleged false statements were not within the scope of potential liability under the False Claims Act (FCA). That conclusion was incorrect, as the United States explained in the amicus curiae brief it submitted to this Court several months ago.

After the United States filed its amicus brief, one of the three sets of defendants filed a brief asserting, for the first time, that the qui tam provisions of the FCA violate Article II of the Constitution. The Court certified that constitutional challenge to the Attorney General pursuant to Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 44(a). The United States intervened to defend the constitutionality of the statute and explains in this brief that the newly raised constitutional arguments—which courts of appeals have unanimously rejected—lack merit.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

1. Whether the qui tam provisions of the FCA are consistent with the constitutional separation of powers.
2. Whether the qui tam provisions of the FCA are consistent with the Appointments Clause of the Constitution.

PERTINENT STATUTES AND REGULATIONS

Pertinent statutes and regulations are reproduced in the addendum to this brief.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Statutory Background

When Congress enacted the FCA in 1863, it followed “long tradition . . . in England and the American Colonies” and incorporated “qui tam” provisions that authorized private persons to bring suit to recover damages suffered by the United States. Vermont Agency of Nat. Res. v. United States ex rel. Stevens, 529 U.S. 765, 768, 772-74 (2000). The provisions were also consistent with practice in the early United States: “immediately after the framing, the First Congress enacted a considerable number of informer statutes,” some of which “provided both a bounty and an express cause of action.” Id. at 776-77.

The contemporary version of the FCA retains the basic structure of the qui tam mechanism. Under the current statute, the Attorney General may bring a civil action to recover treble damages and civil penalties for a violation of the FCA. See 31 U.S.C. § 3730(a). Alternatively, a private person known as a “relator” may bring suit “for the person and for the United States Government.” Id. § 3730(b)(1). The relator’s complaint must be filed under seal and served upon the United States. Id. § 3730(b)(2). The government then has 60 days, subject to extension, to decide whether to intervene and take over the suit. Id. § 3730(b)(2), (3).

If the United States intervenes, “the action shall be conducted by the Government.” 31 U.S.C. § 3730(b)(4)(A). In that circumstance, the government “shall have the primary responsibility for prosecuting the action.” Id. § 3730(c)(1).

The government may intervene either initially or “at a later date upon a showing of good cause,” id. § 3730(c)(3), and, upon doing so, may file its own complaint or amend the relator’s complaint to add or clarify claims, id. § 3731(c).

If the United States declines to intervene, “the person bringing the action shall have the right to conduct the action.” 31 U.S.C. § 3730(b)(4)(B). The relator is neither the government nor its legal representative, however. He does not appear on behalf of the United States, nor are his legal and factual representations those of the United States. He is a “private part[y]” seeking to vindicate his independent interest, which arises by virtue of the statute’s “partial assignment of the Government’s damages claim” to him. Stevens, 529 U.S. at 773, 786 n.17; see also 31 U.S.C. § 3730(d) (entitling a relator to a share of the award if his action results in a financial recovery).

Under the current version of the FCA, the government retains considerable control over qui tam suits that the Attorney General has declined to take over. For example, the government is entitled to ongoing information about such cases, can limit discovery to avoid interference with a government investigation or prosecution, and can pursue alternate remedies against the defendant. 31 U.S.C. § 3730(c)(3)-(5). The government can veto a relator’s proposed dismissal or settlement of an action or, conversely, dismiss or settle the action over the relator’s objection. Id. § 3730(b)(1), (c)(2)(A), (B); see also, e.g., Ridenour v. Kaiser-Hill Co., 397 F.3d 925, 935-38 (10th Cir. 2005); Searcy v. Philips Elecs. N. Am. Corp., 117 F.3d 154, 155 (5th Cir. 1997). The government is not liable for any expenses the relator incurs in bringing suit. 31 U.S.C. § 3730(f).

B. Prior Proceedings

Relator Gerald Polukoff brought this qui tam suit alleging that a physician and two hospitals sought federal reimbursement for medically unnecessary cardiac procedures. See Am. Compl. ¶ 2 [Aplt. App. 506-07]. The United States declined to intervene in the action, see United States’ Notice of Election to Decline Intervention (June 15, 2015) [Aplt. App. 60-62], and defendants then moved to dismiss on statutory and procedural grounds. The district court granted defendants’ motions, dismissing the case with prejudice because the court did not believe the relator’s allegations could form the basis for FCA liability. See Op. 18-21 [Aplt. App. 2526-29].

The relator appealed to this Court, and the United States filed an amicus brief in his support. All three sets of defendants then filed briefs responding to the statutory arguments the relator and the United States had made. One set of defendants (“Intermountain”) also asserted for the first time, however, that the qui tam provisions of the FCA violate Article II of the U.S. Constitution. See Intermountain Br. 54-64. Intermountain conceded that it had failed to make these arguments below and that this Court and others had rejected them in prior cases. See id.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The Court should decline to consider Intermountain’s belatedly raised contention that the qui tam provisions of the FCA violate Article II of the Constitution. If the Court chooses to entertain the claim, however, the Court should reject it.

Courts of appeals have unanimously agreed that the qui tam provisions of the FCA are consistent with the constitutional separation of powers. In determining whether legislation “disrupts the proper balance between the coordinate branches, the proper inquiry focuses on the extent to which it prevents the Executive Branch from accomplishing its constitutionally assigned functions.” Nixon v. Administrator of Gen. Servs., 433 U.S. 425, 443 (1977). As the Supreme Court made clear in Vermont Agency of Natural Resources v. United States ex rel. Stevens, 529 U.S. 765 (2000), a qui tam relator is a private litigant pursuing his private interest: a partial assignment of a damages claim of the United States. That is true even though a relator’s suit may also vindicate a federal interest in remedying and deterring fraud on the United States.

Courts have also correctly recognized that the FCA is consistent with long tradition in England and the early United States; the unique qui tam mechanism was already familiar when the Constitution was ratified, and the Framers would not likely have viewed relators as improperly exercising government power. Indeed, the early Congresses enacted numerous statutes authorizing such actions. Moreover, the Executive Branch retains ample authority, regardless of whether the United States intervenes in a given case, to prevent uses of the FCA qui tam mechanism that might disserve the interests of the United States.

The qui tam provisions are also consistent with the Appointments Clause. As Intermountain concedes, binding circuit precedent squarely forecloses its contention on this point. This Court has correctly held that qui tam relators are not “Officers of the United States” to whom the Clause would apply. See United States ex rel. Stone v. Rockwell Int’l Corp., 282 F.3d 787, 805 (10th Cir. 2002).

ARGUMENT

This Court should decline to entertain Intermountain’s constitutional challenge for the first time on appeal. Although a court of appeals has discretion to affirm a decision “on any basis supported by the record,” Richison v. Ernest Grp., Inc., 634 F.3d 1123, 1130 (10th Cir. 2011), prudential principles counsel strongly against deciding a constitutional issue that no party raised below and that the district court did not consider. Cf. Heckler v. Campbell, 461 U.S. 458, 468 n.12 (1983) (explaining that, although the Supreme Court can affirm on grounds different than those on which the court of appeals relied, it considers claims that were not raised below “only in exceptional cases”); Richison, 634 F.3d at 1130 (explaining that it is the function of an appellate court “to correct errors made by the district court in assessing the legal theories presented to it, not to serve as a second-shot forum . . . where secondary, back-up theories may be mounted for the first time”) (quotation marks omitted).

Even if the Court were inclined to excuse Intermountain’s forfeiture of its constitutional arguments, the arguments lack merit. As Intermountain acknowledges, this Court and other courts of appeals have unanimously rejected similar challenges to the FCA. See United States ex rel. Stone v. Rockwell Int'l Corp., 282 F.3d 787 (10th Cir. 2002); Riley v. St. Luke's Episcopal Hosp., 252 F.3d 749 (5th Cir. 2001) (en banc); United States ex rel. Taxpayers Against Fraud v. General Elec. Co., 41 F.3d 1032 (6th Cir. 1994); United States ex rel. Kelly v. Boeing Co., 9 F.3d 743 (9th Cir. 1993); United States ex rel. Kreindler & Kreindler v. United Techs. Corp., 985 F.2d 1148 (2d Cir. 1993).

I. The Qui Tam Provisions Of The FCA Are Facially Consistent With The Constitutional Separation Of Powers

A. Intermountain contends that the qui tam provisions of the FCA on their face violate the Take Care Clause and the Executive Vesting Clause of Article II of the Constitution. “[I]n determining whether [legislation] disrupts the proper balance between the coordinate branches, the proper inquiry focuses on the extent to which it prevents the Executive Branch from accomplishing its constitutionally assigned functions.” Nixon v. Administrator of Gen. Servs., 433 U.S. 425, 443 (1977). Regardless of whether the United States intervenes in a given suit, relators’ conduct of qui tam litigation does not prevent the President from carrying out his constitutional functions—a point on which courts have long agreed.

Qui tam relators are private litigants. The Supreme Court made this clear in Vermont Agency of Natural Resources v. United States ex rel. Stevens, where it expressly declined to adopt a theory that a private relator sues as an “agent of the United States.” 529 U.S. 765, 772 (2000). The Court instead held that, although it is the United States whose injury underlies an FCA suit, the relator has Article III standing because of his independent stake: he has a “concrete private interest in the outcome of the suit” that arises from Congress’s “partial assignment of the Government’s damages claim” to him. Id. at 772-73 (emphasis added). That a relator brings a qui tam action “in the name of the Government,” 31 U.S.C. § 3730(b)(1), is a procedural practice that does not alter this conclusion, and the merits analysis in Stevens further underscores the point. After addressing standing, the Supreme Court held that the FCA does not authorize relators to pursue qui tam actions against states because, among other things, actions pursued by relators are “private suit[s]” brought by “private parties.” Stevens, 529 U.S. at 780-81 n.9, 786 n.17; see also United States ex rel. Ritchie v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 558 F.3d 1161, 1167 (10th Cir. 2009) (holding that a would-be relator had validly released potential future qui tam claims because “the relator has an interest in some part of the civil action apart from the government”).

That a relator’s suit may also vindicate a federal interest in remedying and deterring fraud on the United States does not change the analysis. As the en banc Fifth Circuit explained when it rejected a claim analogous to Intermountain’s, the Take Care Clause “does not require Congress to prescribe litigation by the Executive as the exclusive means of enforcing federal law.” Riley, 252 F.3d at 753. Instead, as the Sixth Circuit noted, “[o]ur current statutory framework includes many laws that authorize individuals to act as ‘private attorneys-general,’ bringing causes of action for the common weal,” Taxpayers Against Fraud, 41 F.3d at 1041, such as Title VII and the Sherman Act.

Courts have also correctly recognized that historical evidence helps establish the validity of the qui tam provisions. “Statutes providing for actions by a common informer, who himself had no interest whatever in the controversy other than that given by statute, have been in existence for hundreds of years in England, and in this country ever since the foundation of our government.” United States ex rel. Marcus v. Hess, 317 U.S. 537, 541 n.4 (1943). In Stevens, the Supreme Court reviewed this “long tradition of qui tam actions in England and the American Colonies,” as well as the “considerable number” of such statutes that the First Congress itself enacted,¹ and found the evidence “well nigh conclusive with respect to the question . . . whether qui tam actions were cases and controversies of the sort traditionally amenable to, and resolved by, the judicial process.” 529 U.S. at 774, 776-77 (quotation marks omitted).

The historical evidence is also highly relevant to the constitutional question presented here. See, e.g., Riley, 252 F.3d at 752-53. That the First Congress enacted numerous qui tam provisions makes clear that the Framers did not believe relators were performing functions that only federal officers could properly perform. See Bowsber v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714, 723-24 (1986) (explaining that acts of the First Congress “provide[] contemporaneous and weighty evidence of the Constitution’s meaning since many of the Members of the First Congress had taken part in framing that instrument”) (quotation marks omitted). And the long tradition of qui tam actions in the United States after the Framing provides “additional evidence that the doctrine of separated powers does not prohibit” this unique practice, given that “‘traditional ways of conducting government . . . give meaning’ to the Constitution.” Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361, 401 (1989) (quoting Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 610 (1952) (Frankfurter, J., concurring)); see also NLRB v. Noel Canning, 134 S. Ct. 2550, 2559-60 (2014).

B. This Court has likewise upheld the qui tam provisions as constitutional, though it has not yet had reason to address that issue in a case in which the government has not intervened. In Stone, this Court cited the decisions of its sister circuits and concluded that, “at least where the Government is permitted to intervene and does so, the qui tam provisions of the FCA do not violate the Take Care Clause provisions of Article II and their separation of powers principles.” 282 F.3d at 806. That conclusion was correct, and it is equally so where the government does not intervene. As explained above, a qui tam relator is a private litigant pursuing a suit in his private interest, pursuant to a well-established historical framework.

In Stone, this Court explained that the government maintains significant control over qui tam litigation in which it intervenes. See 282 F.3d at 805-07. Numerous courts of appeals have correctly recognized that, under the current version of the FCA, the United States likewise retains significant control over qui tam suits in which it does not intervene. See Riley, 252 F.3d at 753-57; Taxpayers Against Fraud, 41 F.3d at 1041; Kelly, 9 F.3d at 753-55; Kreindler & Kreindler, 985 F.2d at 1155. Regardless of whether it intervenes, for example, the United States is entitled to receive copies of all pleadings and transcripts, 31 U.S.C. § 3730(c)(3); to stay any discovery by the relator that “would interfere with the Government’s investigation or prosecution of a criminal or civil matter arising out of the same facts,” id. § 3730(c)(4); and to pursue “any alternate remedy available to the Government” against the defendant, id. § 3730(c)(5). The government may intervene in a qui tam suit at any time “upon a showing of good cause.” Id. § 3730(c)(3). After doing so, the government has “the primary responsibility for prosecuting the action, and shall not be bound by an act of” the relator. Id. § 3730(c)(1).

Even if it never intervenes, the United States can dismiss a qui tam suit over the relator’s objection. See 31 U.S.C. § 3730(c)(2)(A); see also Ridenour, 397 F.3d at 932 (holding that the government need not intervene before dismissing a relator’s case). The government can, for example, dismiss even a meritorious qui tam suit simply because the government has separately resolved the claims at issue and wishes to prevent duplicative litigation, see United States ex rel. Wickliffe v. EMC Corp., 473 F. App’x 849, 853-54 (10th Cir. 2012), or because the suit might divert government resources from other projects or risk disclosure of sensitive information, see Ridenour, 397 F.3d at 936-37.²

The government can also settle a pending qui tam suit even without formally intervening. See 31 U.S.C. § 3730(c)(2)(B); United States v. Everglades Coll., Inc., 855 F.3d 1279, 1285-86 & n.3 (11th Cir. 2017) (Ebel, J., sitting by designation); see also id. at 1288 (affording “considerable deference to the settlement rationale offered by the government”). The government can veto a relator’s proposed settlement or voluntary dismissal of his action. See 31 U.S.C. § 3730(b)(1); Ridenour, 397 F.3d at 931 n.8. And because the first-to-file bar and the public disclosure bar do not apply to the government, the government can bring its own action even after a relator’s suit is dismissed, subject to principles of claim preclusion. See 31 U.S.C. § 3730(b)(5), (e)(4).

All of these control mechanisms have been fully available here. Like Stone, this is not a case in which “the Government . . . sought permission to intervene, but was denied intervention by the district court, or . . . the Government desired to remove the relator from the action but was prevented from doing so by application of the statute.” 282 F.3d at 806 n.6. Nor did the government seek to dismiss the action or otherwise oppose the relator’s prosecution of the claim. Instead, the district court’s order unsealing the case acknowledged the United States' statutory rights, see Order (June 19, 2015) [Aplt. App. 65-66], and the government has monitored the litigation and actively participated in support of the relator before this Court.³

² The D.C. Circuit has held that 31 U.S.C. § 3730(c)(2)(A) gives the government “an unfettered right to dismiss” a relator’s suit. Swift v. United States, 318 F.3d 250, 252-53 (D.C. Cir. 2003). This Court has left open the possibility of adopting that approach where the defendant has not yet been served. See Wickliffe, 473 F. App’x at 853.

C. Intermountain's contrary contentions lack merit.

Intermountain suggests that the FCA is unconstitutional because the President cannot "remove" a relator. See Intermountain Br. 57-58. The government may, however, intervene and displace the relator's authority to litigate a case, and even if it does not do so, it is empowered to dismiss the relator's lawsuit, eliminating any ability of the relator to exercise any sort of power whatsoever. The Constitution does not require that the Executive Branch have any additional power to preclude a private litigant whose suit would vindicate public rights from prosecuting a case. Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654 (1988), on which Intermountain primarily relies, upheld restrictions on the President's ability to remove an independent counsel who possessed "full power and independent authority to exercise all investigative and prosecutorial functions and powers of the Department of Justice." Morrison, 487 U.S. at 662. By contrast, under the FCA's qui tam provisions, a relator is not a government official and does not litigate as the United States. The government's own conduct in the litigation is entrusted solely to officials within the Executive Branch, and the government has far greater authority over the relator's conduct of qui tam litigation than it had over the independent counsel in Morrison in any event. Moreover, insofar as Intermountain focuses more generally on the fact that qui tam relators' suits can vindicate the public interest, that is no different than private plaintiffs under statutes like the Sherman Act and Title VII. Intermountain's focus on "removal" is thus fundamentally misplaced. See also Kelly, 9 F.3d at 755 (explaining that the "concept of removal does not make sense in the qui tam context, in which there is no 'office' from which to remove the relator and subsequently fill with someone else").

For the same reasons, it makes no difference that the government "cannot stop a relator ex ante from filing suit." Intermountain Br. 61. Article II does not require that Executive Branch officials be able to prevent private litigants from suing to vindicate their "private interest[s]," Stevens, 529 U.S. at 772, even if those private interests may overlap with public ones. Intermountain does not contend that the Constitution would require that the Executive Branch approve private suits under Title VII or under the Sherman Act, for example, before they are filed. And, once a qui tam suit is filed under the FCA, the statute includes many provisions by which the Executive Branch can prevent uses of the qui tam mechanism that might be inconsistent with United States interests. See supra pp. 10-13.

Intermountain's reference to Printz v. United States, 521 U.S. 898 (1997), likewise underscores the validity of the qui tam provisions. Printz invalidated, largely on federalism grounds, a statute that required state and local law enforcement officers to conduct background checks on gun purchasers. The Court’s opinion explained that the statute was also problematic because it delegated the administration of federal law to state and local officers “without meaningful Presidential control.” Id. at 922.

Unlike in Printz, however, qui tam relators are not state officers who are being “dragooned . . . into administering federal law,” id. at 928 (quotation marks omitted), in what the Supreme Court viewed as a significant departure from historical precedent, id. at 905-18. They are instead private litigants who voluntarily file civil lawsuits in their own interest. Moreover, as explained above, the President does retain meaningful control over the conduct of qui tam litigation. See supra pp. 10-13.

Intermountain also mistakenly invokes a footnote from the Stevens opinion, in which the Justices in the majority noted that they were expressing no view on whether the FCA’s qui tam provisions are consistent with Article II. See 529 U.S. at 778 n.8. As explained above, however, although Stevens did not resolve the Article II issue, it clarified that relators are not government agents, but “private parties” who file suit to vindicate their own personal interest, consistent with “the long tradition of qui tam actions in England and the American Colonies.” Id. at 774, 786 & n.17.

II. The Qui Tam Provisions Are Consistent With The Appointments Clause

Intermountain concedes that Circuit precedent squarely forecloses its Appointments Clause claim. As this Court has held, the Appointments Clause governs the procedures by which “Officers of the United States” are appointed, U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2, but relators “do not serve in any office of the United States,” Stone, 282 F.3d at 805. “There is no legislatively created office of informer or relator under the FCA”; “[r]elators are not entitled to the benefits of officeholders, such as drawing a government salary”; and relators “are not subject to the requirement, noted long ago by the Supreme Court, that the definition of an officer ‘embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties, and the latter were continuing and permanent, not occasional or temporary.’” Id. (quoting United States v. Germaine, 99 U.S. 508, 511-12 (1879)); see also Auffmordt v. Hedden, 137 U.S. 310, 327 (1890). No intervening decision of the Supreme Court undermines Stone’s continuing validity. The Appointments Clause thus does not apply.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court should decline to consider, or reject, Intermountain's contention that the qui tam provisions of the FCA are unconstitutional.

Respectfully submitted,

31 U.S.C. § 3730A1
31 U.S.C. § 3731A3

31 U.S.C. § 3730

§ 3730. Civil actions for false claims

(a) Responsibilities of the Attorney General.—The Attorney General diligently shall investigate a violation under section 3729. If the Attorney General finds that a person has violated or is violating section 3729, the Attorney General may bring a civil action under this section against the person.

(b) Actions by private persons.—(1) A person may bring a civil action for a violation of section 3729 for the person and for the United States Government. The action shall be brought in the name of the Government. The action may be dismissed only if the court and the Attorney General give written consent to the dismissal and their reasons for consenting.

(2) A copy of the complaint and written disclosure of substantially all material evidence and information the person possesses shall be served on the Government pursuant to Rule 4(d)(4) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The complaint shall be filed in camera, shall remain under seal for at least 60 days, and shall not be served on the defendant until the court so orders. The Government may elect to intervene and proceed with the action within 60 days after it receives both the complaint and the material evidence and information.

(3) The Government may, for good cause shown, move the court for extensions of the time during which the complaint remains under seal under paragraph (2). . . .

(4) Before the expiration of the 60-day period or any extensions obtained under paragraph (3), the Government shall—

(A) proceed with the action, in which case the action shall be conducted by the Government; or

(B) notify the court that it declines to take over the action, in which case the person bringing the action shall have the right to conduct the action.

(5) When a person brings an action under this subsection, no person other than the Government may intervene or bring a related action based on the facts underlying the pending action.

(c) Rights of the parties to qui tam actions.—(1) If the Government proceeds with the action, it shall have the primary responsibility for prosecuting the action, and shall not be bound by an act of the person bringing the action. Such person shall have the right to continue as a party to the action, subject to the limitations set forth in paragraph (2).

(2)(A) The Government may dismiss the action notwithstanding the objections of the person initiating the action if the person has been notified by the Government of the filing of the motion and the court has provided the person with an opportunity for a hearing on the motion.

(B) The Government may settle the action with the defendant notwithstanding the objections of the person initiating the action if the court determines, after a hearing, that the proposed settlement is fair, adequate, and reasonable under all the circumstances. Upon a showing of good cause, such hearing may be held in camera.

(C) Upon a showing by the Government that unrestricted participation during the course of the litigation by the person initiating the action would interfere with or unduly delay the Government's prosecution of the case, or would be repetitious, irrelevant, or for purposes of harassment, the court may, in its discretion, impose limitations on the person's participation, such as—

- (i) limiting the number of witnesses the person may call;
- (ii) limiting the length of the testimony of such witnesses;
- (iii) limiting the person's cross-examination of witnesses; or
- (iv) otherwise limiting the participation by the person in the litigation.

(3) If the Government elects not to proceed with the action, the person who initiated the action shall have the right to conduct the action. If the Government so requests, it shall be served with copies of all pleadings filed in the action and shall be supplied with copies of all deposition transcripts (at the Government's expense). When a person proceeds with the action, the court, without limiting the status and rights of the person initiating the action, may nevertheless permit the Government to intervene at a later date upon a showing of good cause.

(4) Whether or not the Government proceeds with the action, upon a showing by the Government that certain actions of discovery by the person initiating the action would interfere with the Government's investigation or prosecution of a criminal or civil matter arising out of the same facts, the court may stay such discovery for a period of not more than 60 days. Such a showing shall be conducted in camera. The court may extend the 60-day period upon a further showing in camera that the Government has pursued the criminal or civil investigation or proceedings with reasonable diligence and any proposed discovery in the civil action will interfere with the ongoing criminal or civil investigation or proceedings.

(5) Notwithstanding subsection (b), the Government may elect to pursue its claim through any alternate remedy available to the Government, including any administrative proceeding to determine a civil money penalty. . . .

(d) Award to qui tam plaintiff.—(1) If the Government proceeds with an action brought by a person under subsection (b), such person shall, subject to the second sentence of this paragraph, receive at least 15 percent but not more than 25 percent of the proceeds of the action or settlement of the claim, depending upon the extent to which the person substantially contributed to the prosecution of the action. . . .

(2) If the Government does not proceed with an action under this section, the person bringing the action or settling the claim shall receive an amount which the court decides is reasonable for collecting the civil penalty and damages. The amount shall be not less than 25 percent and not more than 30 percent of the proceeds of the action or settlement and shall be paid out of such proceeds. . . .

(4) If the Government does not proceed with the action and the person bringing the action conducts the action, the court may award to the defendant its reasonable attorneys' fees and expenses if the defendant prevails in the action and the court finds that the claim of the person bringing the action was clearly frivolous, clearly vexatious, or brought primarily for purposes of harassment.

(f) Government not liable for certain expenses.— The Government is not liable for expenses which a person incurs in bringing an action under this section.

31 U.S.C. § 3731

§ 3730. False claims procedure

(c) If the Government elects to intervene and proceed with an action brought under 3730(b), the Government may file its own complaint or amend the complaint of a person who has brought an action under section 3730(b) to clarify or add detail to the claims in which the Government is intervening and to add any additional claims with respect to which the Government contends it is entitled to relief. For statute of limitations purposes, any such Government pleading shall relate back to the filing date of the complaint of the person who originally brought the action, to the extent that the claim of the Government arises out of the conduct, transactions, or occurrences set forth, or attempted to be set forth, in the prior complaint of that person.
